

To Whom It May Concern:

I oppose the proposal made by the FCC Commission considering the lessening of restrictions on indecent material to be shown on primetime television and heard on public radio. Adults and parents already spend enough time censoring and shielding children from the vast levels of inappropriate content that are currently viewed on network television.

In addition, I know many adults would prefer to abstain from further exposure to explicit materials to be shown on television or heard on the radio. I am in favor of the Commission retaining the current indecency policy so that children may be protected and so that adults may, should they so choose, avoid as much inappropriate content as possible.

The current indecency policy is lenient, and no further content is needed to draw attention to the television networks.

Sincerely,

Hannah Jacob
